

Medical Health Rpt. During Past Year Proves Favorable

The following reports of the two doctors who have held the office of M.H.O. for the Town during 1940: The Public Health Committee, Town of Wainwright.

Gentlemen:—It is my pleasure to submit a statement of the work of your medical health officer for the period January to September, 1940. Early in the year the problem of persons within the Town limits maintaining pigs on their premises was successfully dealt with.

A "clean-up" programme in May did much to educate the householders as to the proper disposal of refuse. This has resulted in tidier lanes during the summer.

Two cases of mumps were isolated with no general outbreak of this disease in your schools.

One case of chicken pox was reported in August, with no subsequent outbreak.

Several cases of scabies were found in the schools due to the close co-operation of the teaching staffs. These were successfully treated before being allowed to return to schools.

Freebies of milk producers have been visited twice this year, and reports of two milk examinations are in the Secretary's files. Certain recommendations have been made to improve the cleanliness of the milk.

That there have been carried out in the milkery in the markedly improved analysis report for September. It is advised that frequent analyses are an incentive to better care in milk production.

It was drawn to the attention of the health officer that one distributor was infringing upon the health regulations by collecting and selling cream from an unlicensed source. This farm has been inspected and was found to be satisfactory.

It is recommended that the premises be carefully examined if application is made for a license.

The problem of sewage disposal in two areas has been examined. The problem was considered in a personal interview with Doctor R. M. Shaw, bacteriologist at the provincial laboratory.

This was referred to the provincial sanitary engineer and a representative of that department (Mr. Butterfield) was sent here to inspect the premises. A written report from him is forthcoming.

The sub-surface irrigation at the hotel is a satisfactory disposal system, but requires some adjustments to maintain even distribution in the pipelines. These are to be undertaken at once.

The premises at the corner of Main street and Sixth Avenue were examined and the overflow on road is apparently due to overflow from the system. This problem constitutes a public nuisance and as such is a problem for the Council.

This report is respectfully submitted with thanks to the committee for their sympathetic support and co-operation.

R. A. PROCTOR, M.D.

The Secretary and Council, Town of Wainwright.

Sirs—When Dr. Proctor, M.H.O., left Wainwright, I took over the duties of the health officer for the year. I presume that you have his report covering such matters as sanitation, dairies, eating places, etc.

There have been two cases of scarlet fever, but this disease did not become epidemic, and danger of it becoming so should now be passed.

Recently influenza, but this has been on the whole, of a comparatively mild form and is now subsiding. At its height attendance at school was cut to such an extent that the public school was closed for two days.

H. C. WALLACE, M.D.

AN URGENT APPEAL

An urgent appeal is being made by the British and Foreign Bible Society for help to supply Testaments to every soldier in His Majesty's Forces. As there are no canvassers this season, donations may be given to the various churches, to Mr. Daly, president, or Mr. J. Whalley, secretary.

It is reported from the Bible House in Edmonton that one million copies of the New Testament have been distributed among our units both at home and overseas, and included in each copy is a message from His Majesty the King.

Descendants Of The Wise Men

(BY LYMAN B. JACKES IN THE STAR WEEKLY)

Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem.

Saying, Where is He that is born King of the Jews? For we have seen his star in the east and are come to worship him. When Herod the king had heard these things, he was greatly troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.

And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts of gold, and frankincense and myrrh.

And being warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod they departed into their own country another way.

When an archeologist digs deeply into the ancient literature of Persia and places that literature side by side with the facts as recorded in the gospel story, something a great deal deeper and beautiful emerges. He is forced to admit that the birth of Christ was an event which shook the greatest institution of learning of that period to its very foundations.

I would not attempt to write this story were it not for two facts: I was a member of the original expedition that set out from Nazareth, on the banks of the Euphrates river, in December of 1917; which resulted in the discovery of Ur, of the Chaldees. This was the home of Abraham and since the close of the last war, the scene of great archeological activities carried on with British and United States financial support. The second fact which induces me to write this story is merely that I have knocked around a bit in Palestine, Egypt, India, Persia, Mesopotamia and other points in the east and have had an opportunity to do a little bit of archeological work on my own, in an effort to get behind the Christmas story as told in the gospels.

The only portion of the Christmas story which enters into this writing are the details of the visit of the wise men to Jerusalem and Bethlehem. This is set forth in great detail in the gospel story; which at once suggests that the visit was a most unusual thing in itself. But the writer of the gospel story does more than that. He records in detail the nature of the "gifts" that the wise men brought with them. The gospel writer does this in sheer astonishment; for contrary to popular opinion the three gifts mentioned in the list of gifts—the gold, frankincense and myrrh—had no intrinsic value whatsoever.

If you have in your medicine cabinet some inexpensive healing ointment—something that retails for five or ten cents a tin—and a bottle of some cheap disinfectant standing beside it; you have the modern equivalent of what these visitors brought to Bethlehem.

You may reply that the gold certainly was valuable. If you do so you are wrong again. Two thousand years ago silver was king in the financial marts of the world. Gold was of little more value than the base metals of today.

Who were these wise men? Where did they come from and what was the meaning of their visit?

The gospel story relates that they came from the east. A glance at the map of western Asia will show that immediately to the east of Palestine there is desert and that condition prevailed in New Testament times. Immediately to the east of this desert we come to the country that is watered by the Tigris and Euphrates. Next to the east we come to the land of Persia, and in gospel times Persia was flourishing, the centre of world culture and worldly wealth.

This condition in Persia was largely brought about by the leaders of the faith of Zoroaster. They were the leaders of Persian thought, culture, science and commerce and it was the priests of this tribe that sent three members of their cult to Jerusalem almost 2,000 years ago. We know those priests as the wise men.

Twenty centuries have seen changes in Persia. The country remains a political entity; but under the sway of Islam, which swept across the country in the seventh century of this era, it has seen the departure of its former grandeur. But now we come to the strange element in the picture. The ancient grandeur of Zoroastrianism survives. It is more powerful today than it was 20 centuries ago. True, it did not survive in Persia, but the direct descendants of those ancient priests carry on their ancient traditions on the Island of Bombay. The cult of Zoroaster was driven out of Persia by the Arab hordes of 13 centuries ago and re-established itself on the coasts of India. And there they live today; their ancient faith unshaken by the years.

They are not known as Zoroastrians today. Their modern title is Parsees. The Parsee has always been exclusive. The only method of joining the fraternity is by birth. They seek no adherents nor admit any if they apply. The tribe today numbers slightly less than 100,000. Like their forebears of 20 centuries ago—the time of the Christian story—they are rich people by any standard in the world today.

The modern Parsee looks upon himself and his kindred as the aristocracy of the orient. With his countless wealth behind him and the absence of anything that is vile in his religion and his great tolerance toward the education of the female members of the tribe; he can stand aloof and let the rest of the eastern world go by.

Thus it was that I asked a Parsee of my acquaintance one day if there was any record or tradition of any excursion in ancient times into other religions.

And he answered: "Yes." A tradition has come down that some 2,000 years ago their astrologer priests left the observatory in Persia and journeyed to Palestine to foretell the life of a new king that had been born.

The reader should appreciate the fact that this man was not merely a merchant prince. He was a graduate of Oxford university. He spoke seven foreign tongues, and he was widely acquainted with western literature including the Bible.

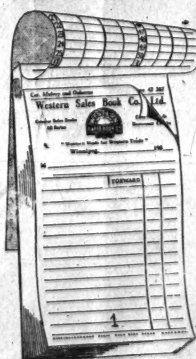

"We have records," he explained, "that some 20 centuries ago a great nova burst forth in the eastern skies. The constellations in the vicinity of this nova were studied and the astrologers came to the conclusion that a great king had been born. For nights the details were studied and the result of the horoscope of this king was no different from that of any other king that they decided to break their age-old traditions and go outside the tribe to forecast his life. Thus they journeyed to Jerusalem." And in this journey they did exactly what they would do if they were proceeding to the home of a Parsee. They took things with them: "gifts" if you will, to bear witness to their words.

According to my Parsee friend, the gold symbolized the fact that he was to be a king but that his kingdom, insofar as pomp and earthly glory were concerned, would rank below the kingdoms of this world. The next gift was meant to symbolize the mission of this kingdom. Frankincense was presented to show that the mission was to be one of healing. Next, in true Parsee tradition, came to the gift that would symbolize the duration of his mission. Myrrh was the common substance used in embalming the dead. It had preserved the mummies of Egypt for a period that was measured only by the fall and rise of dynasties. The presentation of the myrrh was meant to symbolize that this kingdom, which was to lack the pomp and glory of earth, to make healing its greatest mission; was to last forever.

The World of Wheat

H. G. L. Strang, Director, Research Department, Seale Grain Company, Ltd.

Several years ago the DeValera Government of Southern Ireland decided to stop importing wheat and sugar, and to become "self-sufficient" in these products, and so farmers were heavily subsidised to plough up the fine Irish grass, and to sow the land to wheat, and to substitute sugar beets for the famous Irish oats; for the Government had decided that to sell the final products of grass and oats, i.e. cattle, butter, eggs and bacon to Great Britain and to buy wheat from Canada was not economic.

The results of this New Economic Policy have been bad. Irish farmers have become poorer, prices to the Irish people of wheat and sugar have gone up and taxes have become unbearable. As a result of all this the policy has been changed; farmers once again are to be permitted to put their land back to the famed succulent Irish grass and oats; and Eire will sell cattle, butter, eggs and bacon to Great Britain, and will import, as she used to do, her wheat and sugar from countries which can grow these products cheaper and better.

So ends another economic delusion. Let us hope that other countries too, including Canada herself, will soon realise the high virtues of the old-fashioned, but still sound, policy of free trade between the nations.

Following factors have tended to raise prices:—Moisture conditions in India are unfavorable for the growing wheat. China recently purchased 8,000 tons of U.S. flour. It has been suggested that Australia's annual wheat crop for the next few years will not exceed 140 million bushels; Greece is successfully importing wheat from Russia.

Following factors have tended to lower prices:—Private estimates indicate a probable winter wheat crop in the U.S.A. of approximately 40 million bushels greater than last year. First official estimate of Argentina's new wheat crop is 200 million bushels. The weather in Russia has been seasonable, and crop comments are favorable: Spain's wheat acreage is being increased this year.

THE VALUE OF GRAIN MILLET FOR HOG FEEDING

(Experimental Farm News)

With the development in recent years of varieties of millet which yield large quantities of grain, or seed, the question arises as to its feeding value for live stock. Millet compares favorably with the more common grains in yield, but is particularly valuable in wet seasons when it can be sown as late as the end of June with good success. In order to investigate its feeding value with hogs an experiment was undertaken at the Central Experimental Farm during the past summer, states J. G. Stothart, Animal Husbandman, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

Three lots of pigs as equal as possible in all respects were fed up to market weight. Lot 1 was fed a standard feed mixture made up of oats, wheat and barley, along with a protein-mineral supplement. In Lot 2 half the barley fed the check lot (Lot 1) was replaced by millet which made up 25 per cent of the grain part of the ration. In lot 3, millet replaced all the barley fed the check lot, that is, millet comprised 50 per cent of the grain ration. The results of the experiment indicate that millet compares very favorably with barley in production of bacon hogs. In fact, in rate of gain, the millet-fed hogs exceeded the standard or check lot, while in feed utilization, that is, amount of feed required to make a pound of gain, there was little to choose between any of the lots. The quality of the carcasses produced by millet was almost up to that of the barley-fed lot, the only difference being that the millet-fed pigs were inclined to be slightly shorter.

Completing close to half a century of railroad service, Robert Cressman, Passenger Traffic Manager, Canadian National Railways (centre), retired December 18. Mr. Cressman started as a clerk in 1891, and became one of the best known passenger officials on the continent. He will be succeeded by Osborne Scott (right), formerly General Passenger Agent.

Mr. Scott will be succeeded by Walter Dobbs (left), formerly special passenger representative, Montreal. Mr. Scott is a Winnipegger with a very intimate knowledge of Western Canada. Mr. Dobbs was previously located in both Winnipeg and Vancouver.

Although this experiment will need further confirmation it would appear that millet grain or seed in combination with other grains and a protein-mineral supplement can comprise 25 to 50 per cent of the grain ration for hogs very satisfactorily.

HEALTH

A CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY IN CANADA

HEART DISEASE

Don't worry because you think you have heart disease the Health League of Canada urges today. Take your symptoms to a doctor and find that you haven't.

Many of the symptoms which accompany heart trouble—such as shortness of breath or pain in the region of the heart—may arise from some totally different cause, it was stated. Early examination will point to the source and the remedy.

Even in actual cases of heart disease, said a Health League physician, there is seldom cause for excessive alarm. Once the condition is known it is possible to arrange one's habits so that no undue strain is placed on the heart.

Middle age is the danger period, he admitted, but cutting down on physical activities, both in work and recreation, will often counterbalance the trouble and permit the sufferer to lead a normal life for many years.

DIABETES

Periodical medical examinations are urged today by the Health League of Canada for persons who believe they have a tendency to diabetes. Prompt control of the disease by means of diet and insulin may be imposed if the condition is discovered early, it was stated.

Fat people especially are subject to diabetes, according to recognized experts, and usually between the ages of 40 to 60 years. More women than men are affected by the disease. Early symptoms of diabetes are said to be excessive hunger and thirst with loss of weight. Accompanying these are usually irritability and tiredness. Older sufferers are troubled with boils and carbuncles.

SEEDTIME AND HARVEST

By Dr. K. W. Neaby

Director, Agricultural Department, North-West Line Elevators Association

SOIL EROSION

The Agricultural Department of the North-West Line Elevators Association has just published a well-illustrated bulletin dealing with the subject of water erosion of soils. Its purpose is to draw attention to a problem which has, to a large extent, been overlooked by the general public. It has been easy to arouse public interest in the problem of soil drifting, and control practices have met with a large measure of success. Water erosion may be quite as damaging as soil drifting on individual farms, but, since the injury to the soil is often less obvious, it is apt to be neglected.

The bulletin is well illustrated and written in popular style. It deals in a general way with the causes of erosion, with the losses suffered, and with control measures. It contains several excellent illustrations of fields in the Prairie Provinces which are suffering serious damage. In addition, there are four pictures generously supplied by the United States Soil Conservation Service.

Since this is the only publication of its kind in Canada, it should be read by every prairie farmer. All Junior Club members and high school students should secure copies, since "they shall inherit the earth," or as much of it as is not washed or blown away!

Copies may be obtained from the nearest grain buyer of any line elevator company associated with the work of this Department, or by writing to the Agricultural Department, The North-West Line Elevators Association, Winnipeg.

We wish all our readers a Happy and Prosperous New Year, and trust that it may bring "peace in our time."

WAINWRIGHT, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 31st, 1940

EXCESS PROFITS IN ADVERTISING

When war broke loose in 1914, what it did to normal advertising in Canada was just too bad. Contracts were cancelled, rights and left. In fact, some few companies never did get around to advertising again because by the time the war was over, people had forgotten all about them and their products.

But, for the most part, the panic did not last long. By 1915, general business was back to normal and it stayed that way.

This time things are different. World War II was scarcely under way when government closed in on business with both hands on the controls. Imports, foreign exchange costs and profits were closely scrutinized, restricted and taxed according to the part each could play and pay to help win the war.

Of excess profits, seventy-five per cent were earmarked for the government. Standard earnings were to be determined by averaging previous years' operations. Nor was business to be permitted to allow its costs to get out of line. A corporation executive who increased his advertising budget beyond a reasonable estimate of anticipated sales might not only be considered an unpatriotic scoundrel but also the government auditors might not accept as an expense the appropriation he had already spent.

Despite chronic grouching for growing pains, no one really minded paying taxes and more taxes until it hurt a lot. But one little problem most business faces was this—in order to pay more taxes to help win the war, they had to sell more of their goods or services. Now, at a time when war industries are humming, employment up and competition keen, the need to advertise more to sell more (the sale of those products not being discouraged by the government) becomes even more vital.

We talked to a number of top rank advertising men about all this. Without exception, they agreed with these views. However, there was a "but-don't-quit-me" rider on most of their opinions. Like us, they did not wish to expose themselves to the false impression some people might get that they were pushing their own interests to the detriment of their country's.

Therefore, let us be clearly understood. We believe that there is good reason to increase national advertising in Canada next year. But by that we do not mean that there is any necessity to abuse the privilege and opportunity by stretching the appropriation beyond a proper percentage of anticipated sales.

To our way of thinking, however, there is less real danger of tax loss involved in too much advertising than too little. Don't do enough advertising and what happens? Sales and profits drop off and the Receiver General loses out on taxes because the extra money just doesn't live there any more.

But increase advertising to reasonable limits and what is the story? Profits and sales increase in tomorrow's markets so the government stands to collect higher tax revenues. Company names and products, relations with the public will be stronger than ever when peace comes. What's more, as such increased expenditures will well add to the profits of the various agencies involved in the production of advertising, the tax returned on combined excess profits stands to be even higher than if it had been collected from the advertiser alone.

Finally, remember that this war is different—it is a war of attrition in which sound economics and good business play a vital part. If what we have said makes sense to you, so does an aggressive policy of advertising and selling for therein rests a great part of victory.

RED CROSS NEWS

FOR THE WEEK

To begin with may we quote a letter from headquarters which was received by the Secretary of the Work Committee which will indicate the calibre and appreciation of the work done by the friends of the Red Cross within our district. We quote: "Please thank the ladies for the large quantity of well made articles received here. When so much is needed, it is a great satisfaction to open a box and find 101 pairs of socks. We appreciate, too, having the sheets and pillow slips so well done; and the pyjamas property made and folded. With kind regards to the members of your branch."

May we add our own thanks and appreciation to those who are initially responsible for such a letter to be sent to our branch? Keep up the good work—in the name of God, hurry!

Though it was very foggy Christmas day, I don't think the weather bothered any one's appetite. I hope no one got indigestion.

CHAPTER III

"We'll find your favorite shop, and buy 'em out. Maybe you'd better tell Dorothy."

"Oh—no—"

He laughed at the horror in Valerie's eyes. Then he decided it was no laughing matter.

The train slipped away from the platform. Valerie and Mark had almost missed it. Mark apologized steadily for the two minutes left him, and said things about the traffic.

He was so charming, Valerie wondered how Dorothy could look at him so crossly. She and Paul stood in the vestibule of their car, behind glass for now the door was shut in their very faces. Her aunt looked out at them grimly as they stood side by side on the platform. She looked like Miss Weatherbee, at Bolton, bursting with things to say, most of which would make you wish you had never been born. It was funny, because of course she didn't really look like Miss Weatherbee at all. It was something sort of behind her face. Maybe it was her thoughts.

Anyway, she had no chance to speak for suddenly the train was gone, leaving a faintly disturbing scent of smoke about their heads. It made you think of places—California, where you longed to go, and other far spots.

"A railroad station is terribly exciting, isn't it?" Valerie asked, as they went back up the long stairs. "I mean—it sort of goes up your spine—"

Mark stopped short to look down on her. "Can you belong by the Wandering Foot?" he asked. Because, if so, you've picked the right parent. Just give me a few minutes at the factory to make 'em think they can't get along without me, and I'll show you a real vacation."

"You mean—away?"

"Nothing else but. Where would you be wanting to go?"

"California, please—and the South Seas—nowhere cold—unless you like it—"

"California and the South Seas are all right with me."

They came out of the station, found the parked roadster, and headed for home. Mark asked which one she preferred, and Valerie, after trying frantically to be grown-up, collapsed and told him the truth.

"I don't know any shops, father. You see, I never saw my clothes until they were sent to me. Mother got them, and I just wore them. She thought girls ought not to think about clothes—I mean, until they were older—so what are we going to do?"

"Oh, we'll muddle along," said Mark.

His eye was caught by a riot of color behind a plate-glass window. He pulled around a corner and parked his car.

They came out an hour later, and piled boxes in the rumble. Valerie had insisted on carrying them. She wouldn't trust them to be delivered.

"I never saw so many at once—eight dresses, three suits, and four coats—besides hats and—all the rest—"

"Whatever are we going to do with all the clothes I have already?"

Mark lit a cigarette, and waved the problem away. "I'll bet Mrs. Banwood knows some needy souls. She looks as if she would. If she doesn't, there are always some people who—well, look out for people."

"I know—the Salvation Army."

"But probably Mrs. Banwood will fix it. Housekeepers are clever, aren't they?"

"Are they? My acquaintance seems to have been limited. Your mother picked Mrs. Banwood off a bush somewhere. I wasn't so crazy about her at first, but now I believe she's good for me. She takes me down. If she looks at me long, I begin to wonder if my face is dirty, or if I have a caterpillar on my collar—"

Valerie giggled delightedly. She knew Mrs. Banwood's effect on one. "She's only my second—I mean housekeeper," she explained. "There was one at school. If the girls met her in the halls, we ran. We never knew why we ran. We just did. So of course Mrs. Banwood seems pretty mild to me."

"I dare say she is really," said Mark. "It's probably my guilty conscience."

Mark headed for his factory next morning. He had, he said, to show up at least for the day, before he began venturing. He wondered uneasily what Valerie would do without him. It was the first time he had left her.

He put it to her at breakfast, but she told him solemnly that with her old things to transfer to Mrs. Banwood, her new ones to pack, the day would be hardly long enough. He left her standing out on the wide steps, the morning breeze in her hair, her right hand raised in a queer little salute as he wheeled his roadster around the curve of the drive and was gone.

Valerie watched his car vanish among the trees. She felt small and insignificant, and at the same time terribly important. It was pleasantly confusing. She went into the house, and hurried to her own room.

Valerie went into her dressing room and opened the big clothes closet to pass final sentence on the solemn rows of an orderly row of their hangers. It hardly seemed possible she was about to wipe the place bare of them and start all over again.

She pulled down the things, beginning with the ones she particularly disliked, and carrying them in to pile neatly on her bed. Then she remembered Mark and the hilarity of their shopping. Nothing Mark did could be so very wrong. And Mark had said get rid of them.

She got out the pile of boxes from the corner of the dressing room, and began to untie them, letting out delicious layers of white tissue paper from which rose faint but exciting scent. As she shook out the bright chiffons, the organdies, and the tweeds, she forgot Ellen and her theories. Forgot the empty rooms below. Forgot, for a time, even that there was Mark.

She was balanced in enchantment before the newly filled closet when Mrs. Banwood walked into the room. Valerie jumped and confronted her, standing before the swaying garments defensively.

"I'm afraid I didn't hear you knock—" she said.

"I knocked three times," said Mrs. Banwood. "What in the world!"

"Just—just my new things. I—I'm sorry I didn't hear you." Mrs. Banwood fingered a bright chiffon critically. "And who is going to wear these?" she asked.

"I—I am," Valerie ran past her into the bedroom and gathered a pile of sober garments from the bed. "These are for you." She thrust them into Mrs. Banwood's arms. "My father said you would know what to do with them. You see, somebody may need them—"

"Who bought you the others?"

"My father." The words made magic. She wanted to say them over and over—"my father." When she said it, it made her feel ugly gray.

Mrs. Banwood's disapproval faded. "Aren't you going to wear any mourning?" The woman seemed able to speak in nothing but questions. They sounded bald, even to her own ears.

"My father says it's what's in your heart—not what color you have on."

Mrs. Banwood looked down at her accusingly. "And your mother hardly in her grave!"

Nervous tears filled Valerie's eyes. She could almost see the world turning again into the dim and dusty place where she had lived so long.

Mrs. Banwood was a little troubled at the tears. After all, the child was not her business. Let them dress her in rainbows, for all of her. Housekeepers were not at a premium with conditions what they were, and places like this didn't grow on bushes.

She tried to smile reassuringly at Valerie, who found the grimace terrifying.

"Thanks for the things," said Mrs. Banwood. She settled the clothes more firmly in her lap. "I know two little girls who aren't lucky like you. They will be thankful enough to have them."

Everything in life seemed to be happening at once. Also several things that were not so nice. The best was that the day before they were going away, Shirley called her up. Valerie had thought she had forgotten.

Mark was in town, and Chiltern called her to the telephone in the upstairs sitting room. "Will you speak to Miss Edendont on the telephone, if you please, Miss Valerie!" in Chiltern's best manner.

Valerie had almost forgotten the smooth lovely tones of Shirley's voice. Shirley's message was brief. She wanted, she said, to remind Valerie of their engagement.

"I've been up to my ears, darling, or I'd have 'phone'd before. Going over the proof of a silly book, and trying to finish a story for an exasperated editor only two jumps behind me. Could I drive over and get you tomorrow?"

"Tomorrow we're going away," said Valerie. "She would have been almost said if she hadn't wanted to go so much. There was something about Shirley, that was so sweet."

"Could—could you please have me when we get back?" It took courage to suggest it, but she couldn't quite give it up. "We wouldn't be gone so very long. I do so want to come to your party!"

"Of course," said Shirley over the wire. "Perhaps it will be even nicer, because we'll have more time to think about it. Call me as soon as you get back, and we'll make a date. Maybe Mark would come for dinner, and bring you home."

"Oh—yes—" It was wonderful how things straightened out.

"Have a good time, darling. Don't forget—when you get home—"

"I won't—good-bye—thank you."

She sat still for a moment after she put the telephone back.

What was not so nice was the sight of Ellen's maid coming in from a flying trip to the kennels, late that afternoon. She would have run away to lose herself in the shrubbery if Ellen hadn't caught sight of her just as the big front door swung open.

Ellie turned back and drew Valerie into the house beside her. Valerie led the way into the main drawing room, which always awed her slightly. But she felt that formality belonged to Ellen. She sat on the edge of a petit-point chair, because Ellie had sat down and was undoing her hair.

"I happened to be passing the gates and thought I'd run in and see if I could carry you out to drive a little," she said. "You must be cheering up, darling. You've been on my mind night and day, and I'd have run in days ago, but I thought it more tactful to leave you and your dear daddy to get a bit acquainted."

Ellie got up and went to Valerie's chair and held out her hand. "We're going to be great pals," she said. "Come on—let's drive till dinner time; then I'll bring you back, and your daddy may be home, and perhaps you'll take pity on me and give me a bite to eat. Wouldn't it be sweet—just us three?"

Valerie had to think very quickly. She let Ellie take her hand, although she got up and stood beside her.

"Oh—yes—thank you—" she said. "But you see, we're going on a trip. Tomorrow morning. Very early. My father may not get home until late tonight. And I'm packing—at least, I'm helping—"

RADIO STAR VIEWS
AN IMPORTANT ART

Kate Smith, that lovely voice of the air, knows about more than just music. You can gather, can't you, from her warm rich voice and friendly appearance, that she would just naturally be interested in homey things. Here is what she says about one important department of homemaking: "You know, baking is just about the most appreciated art a woman can take up. To me, a cake is as joyous in its way as a well-remembered song."

Here is a grand cake which has Kate's approval. Enchanted chocolate cake with apricot cream topping, a delicious combination of rich flavoured chocolate and tangy apricot. It sounds grand doesn't it? Kate says too, that when she makes a cake, even though it isn't ladylike, she likes to lick the spoon. She admits that it's hard on the figure but that it certainly is delicious.

Enchanted Chocolate Cake
2 cups sifted cake flour
1/2 teaspoon soda
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup butter or other shortening
1 1/3 cups sugar
3 eggs, unbeaten

3 squares unsweetened chocolate, melted
1/2 cup sour milk or buttermilk
1 teaspoon vanilla
Sift flour once, measure, add soda and salt, and sift together three times. Cream butter thoroughly, add sugar gradually, and cream together until light and fluffy. Add eggs, one at a time, beating thoroughly after each; then add chocolate and blend. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time, beating after each addition until smooth. Add vanilla. Bake in two greased 8-inch layer pans in moderate oven (350° F.) for 30 minutes. Spread Apricot Cream Topping between layers and on top of cake.

Apricot Cream Topping
4 tablespoons sugar
5 tablespoons sifted cake flour
Dash of salt
4 tablespoons canned apricot juice
1 cup canned apricot pulp
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 cup whipped cream
4 halves canned apricots

Combine sugar, flour, and salt in top of double boiler; add apricot juice and mix thoroughly. Sieve well-drained apricots to obtain 1 cup pulp and add gradually to flour mixture, stirring until blended. Place over rapidly boiling water and cook 5 to 7 minutes, or until thickened, stirring constantly. Remove from boiling water; add lemon juice. Chill. Fold in quarter of the whipped cream. Spread half of this filling between layers of cake. Fold remaining whipped cream into the other half and use as topping for cake. Garnish with halved apricots.

WINTER SPORTS IN OLD-WORLD SETTING

Old Quebec City, whose four centuries of history have made it a favorite stopping place for summer tourists, has achieved equal prestige with the winter sports. The secret of this short cut to popularity lies in the sweeping growth of the ski habit, Quebec's glorious winter climate, its facilities for winter sports, and the snow-clad hills of Lac Beauport, 10 miles distant.

This year, with increased numbers of Canadians and Americans pointing their ski tips toward the hills, Lac Beauport, the highlights of the Chateau Frontenac's winter sports season promise to shine more brightly than ever. Headquarters for the famous Ski Hawk School and its equally famous instructor, Fritz Loebl, the popular Canadian Pacific hotelier, will feature a day programme of skating, hockey, curling, tobogganing, ski-jumping, sleigh-driving, and skiing on the historic Plains of Abraham. The annual Dog Derby is scheduled for the third week in February.

Connected by regular bus service from the Chateau Frontenac, Lac Beauport is a model ski development. It possesses a handsome new chalet, thrilling downhill runs, slalom courses and jumps of professional calibre. Mont Saint Castin, with twin skideways 2,200 feet long, 100

NEWS & VIEWS OF TOWN AND DISTRICT

IT SHOULD BE NOTED THAT THE RETAIL STORES IN TOWN CLOSE FROM JAN. 1st TO AUG. 31st EACH WEDNESDAY AT 1 P.M. This notation may save a wasted trip to town on these afternoons. This is effective in each week when no proclaimed holiday occurs.

Mr. and Mrs. Fitzmaurice of Viking were visiting in town last week for the holiday.

Work is to be started at once on an annex for the U.G.O. elevator, a carload of lumber arriving last week and for this purpose.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Faton were visitors to Wainwright to spend Christmas with their parents there.

Mrs. Helen Aykroyd spent the Christmas holidays at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Aykroyd.

Make 1941 a safer year by insuring your buildings, your income, health or sickness, your car or your life with Jos. Welch—insurance of every kind.

Our readers are reminded of the visit of Canon Trendell of Edmonton who will preach at the three Protestant churches next week in furtherance of the Week of Prayer. The services are open to all.

Mr. Emil Michon, with his bride, who were married in Edmonton on Saturday last by Rev. Father Ehmman, of Wainwright, in the cathedral there, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. O. Michon for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Ramsay were up from Edgerton to spend the holiday with Mr. and Mrs. Fish in town.

We learn that young Lawrence O'Rourke, who was taken to the University hospital in the city for observation is progressing favorably. He was struck by a car while playing on the street on December 23, and suffered a broken arm and ribs and head injuries. No blame is attached to the driver of the vehicle, who immediately stopped and took the lad to the local hospital where he received first treatment.

Start 1941 right by investing in a life insurance policy that will protect your family and provide an income for your old age. See Joe Welch at once.

Mr. Leduc, of Valleyfield, Que., is visiting his sons, Isaac and Leopold, of Greenshields. Despite his age (over 80) the visitor made the trip without difficulty.

The annual dinner get-together of the "49-ers" will be held in Edmonton on Saturday next at 7 p.m.

Mrs. J. G. Middlemass has returned from the city after spending Christmas with the doctor, and reports the patient's health to be improving.

Dr. and Mrs. Folkins of Chauvin spent the holiday with their daughter, Mrs. J. A. MacKenzie in town.

Only slight damage was done to the vehicles, and no personal injury resulted on Saturday afternoon when Mr. Gardner Boyd's car and the Alma Market delivery truck were in collision on Main street owing to the slippery conditions.

When you buy a life insurance policy, you not only are sure that your money will be returned with interest if you live, and that your family's financial future will be secure if you don't, but as life insurance companies invest your money with the government to help finance the war, you will be doing your bit for your country as well as for your family and yourself. What better Christmas present for the family than a life insurance policy. See Joe Welch for all kinds of insurance.

Advices to the Board of Trade from the Attorney General's dept. in Edmonton, state that Mr. Fred Gander has received the appointment as resident magistrate for Wainwright.

The hour frost of the past week has made a very pretty scene of the trees and gardens of the district, and many have taken pictures which prove real attractive.

Messrs. Bill Bibby, Jr., and Phil Cummings were both visitors in town during the past week.

A very nice gesture by the local boys of the Canadian Legion was the giving of phasing kits to active service men who were home here for the holidays, from the recently gathered "Buckaroo" fund.

And, finally, don't miss the big feature picture "Geronimo" at the theatre for the end of this week. The title role is played by a real honest-to-goodness Indian chief (Chief Thunder Cloud) and this is a grimly-played Western with lots of humor.
